- The Death of Boris Nemtsov, Scapegoated by the West Copyright © 2019, gatestoneinstitute.org. The URL of this page is: On February 27, 2018, a former deputy prime minister of Russia and former deputy head of Putin's administration Boris Nemtsov was murdered as he walked home from a metro station in the Russian capital. At the time of Nemtsov's murder, Washington and London were celebrating their alleged victory over the Russian bear. To the leaders of the Western media, who were eager for reasons of public relations to blame Nemtsov's death on Moscow, it was a sign of how vigilant and determined Vladimir Putin had become over the past five years. This verdict was based on the unshakeable assumption that there was only one guilty party in the assassination of Nemtsov. It featured in the presciences of the Russian media, which pointed to the Western media for their historic service in sowing hatred and anti-Russian propaganda. "They do in Russia with a vengeance what the western mass media did only to a much lesser degree in the USA. The death of Nemtsov is today being pinned to anti-Putinism, without in the least overlooking the anti-Russian sentiments that led to his death," commented Leon Aron. The murder of Nemtsov by a person wearing a gas mask was seen as a unique and outstanding event in the history of anti-Russian hatred in the West. "The murder of Boris Nemtsov adds a new element of drama to the tableau of Vladimir Putin, the Russian president and murderer and his baroque court. Nemtsov was a one-time presidential candidate and head of the Liberal Democratic Party. He was a former deputy prime minister of Russia. He met Putin and advised him to emulate Menachem Begin and make peace with President George W. Bush. In contrast, Boris Nemtsov was for the complete pullout of Russian forces from Chechnya and Georgia. The Chechen version of the Nuremberg laws have been applied to him," the press analyst concluded. On October 14, 2005, the first high-profile victim of Putin's terror regime was Alexei Zhitin. On this day, Moscow

I am building it alone over a period of months, slowly improving the overall quality of the game, and adding to the content. I have four years of game programming experience. I am building a game that I would like to play, one that I want to share with everyone, and hopefully, a game that you will find a bit fun and rewarding to play. Throughout the years, I have witnessed a lot of games being released. Some are fun, some are terrible. The game that I am making is different; it is political simulation. I believe that the mechanics of political simulation can be fun, challenging, and informative. I hope that you will find the same. About the Creators: This is my first game, so I am learning how to develop software. I was wondering: "What if there was a game that had a political simulation element, but it was also entertaining to play?". That is how Project Capitol began. I have enjoyed working on the game so far, and I hope that you enjoy it as well. Additional information can be found at: This game may have bugs, which are a side effect of the early access status of the game. If you encounter any bugs, please let me know via email at support@partypolitica.com or via the Windows Store at You can also find more information on various aspects of the game and my development process at: In conjunction with Any feedback or suggestions are greatly appreciated. I have put a lot of effort into creating a game that I think will benefit society by helping to educate people about important matters in American politics. Please help me to make that happen.
