Architects and planners across the world are starting to recognise the important contribution Gordon Cullen made to planning design practices in the early 60s. There's no doubt that, as an architect, Cullen believed that cities must be designed with scale and texture, whatever the cost. Drawing on his professional experience on the development of urban areas, he set out to encapsulate this conception in a seminal design book with a far-sighted and prescriptive vision - and with a continuing relevance. He is known as an inspiration and pioneer of the modern urban development of the early 1960s, having been a highly influential consultant, lecturer and mentor to architects and planners, and who has, over the years, supported the dissemination of his ideas through an extensive body of work. In recognition of this contribution Gordon Cullen has been awarded the RIBA Presidential Award, and has been cited in architectural reviews and academic studies - just a few of the accolades that have earned him a worldwide reputation as an early 20th century urbanist and planner. Gordon Cullen was born into a family that had established itself as a prominent Bristol architectural practice, where he was guided by his father, Charles Cullinan, and his mother, Margaret, whose mother, the artist Lily Margaret Cullen, was sister to Wilfrid Crosby; Lily and Gordon were particularly devoted to each other and were married in May 1944. Gordon was educated first at Trinity College of Carmarthen (1937) and then at Harvard University in Cambridge (1938-1939), where he was befriended and tutored by Peter Blake, who became a lifelong friend.
