What's new:

Getting exercise Could running on a treadmill improve my life, or is it just a waste of time? In this week's Mind episode that explores the science and the myths, former New Zealand athlete and life coach Nicholas Egan investigates the link between running and everything from depression to heart health. Subscribe to the Howlin 'N' Holler podcast on iTunes, GooglePlay or wherever you get your podcasts For episode transcripts, go to the Mind website, though that site contains no content other than covering these podcast highlights. To find out more about Mind, visit the Howlin 'N' Holler podcast website, where you'll find a variety of ways to interact and follow the show. You can also follow the podcast on Twitter, Facebook or Instagram. [MUSIC:

Welcome To The Office, Jim Noir, "The Cincinnati Kid" (live)] This week's transcript authored by Pius Tague. [MUSIC: "Cinema Soul", Blue Danube Waltz (conducted by Eric Whitacre)] MICHELLE: I've been a fan of Nick Egan's for a long time. Maybe because he was the first person that really introduced me to the world of coaching. I was going to one of his workshops, and it was a life-changing workshop. And I was really struck, and I thought "Wow, I should try to do that sort of thing," but I just didn't know how and the other stuff that people do. And so I just kind of drifted away from anything like that. And then I saw that he'd kind of got his own podcast series, Mind, which I thought was really nice, and he invited me on the show a few times. Then over the last couple of years, he started to have some coverage in New Zealand newspapers, and because he's local to me, he was kind of like a local hero here. And I really didn't give it that much thought, to be honest. But then he was recognised as New Zealand's best female high jumper, which I think is quite something, and then as a statesman, he really did, in making jokes about the Prime Minister — which I thought was very bold, because it's not something you do normally here in the UK. Obviously, they'll say it in Australia. They've got a program called "Keeping Up With Labor", or something, which I've seen. But action game designed for all ages! Deep cut through the space with your weapon and technology Then, launch your ship and fly through the vast galaxy Focusing on the core gameplay of speed-based puzzle-solving Striking the enemies and harvesting their energy to fuel your mission Lightwire has no time to waste! Quick, strategic and tactical battles bring you to the core of the planet! Power up your weapons by upgrading them with fragments gathered from defeated enemies Travel through the galaxy, colonize worlds, and create a thriving network of light and darkness Your forces will never run out! When you complete a level, you will unlock a new set of challenges Do you think you can survive the game? Start the journey now! The year is A.D. 3055. Humanity was driven from Earth by the deadly G-storm. Five years later, the United States military has developed an underground shelter complex containing human survivors. Brought back to life by a series of genetic therapies, they have become like a new species, the "G-Evolvers." Inducted into a military special forces program, players take control of the latest generation of G-Evolvers on missions where they must take on the greatest threats to mankind. G-Evolvers can mount guns and launch rockets, allowing you to use every part of the environment to your advantage. The destructive power of G-Evolvers is not limited to the ground or space, as players can also blast through walls and telekinetically constrict enemies to their doom. A short animation presents the current results of the research and development of G-Evolvers. Your progress is monitored, and once your General determines that you've completed your mission, you will be promoted to the next level.

===== A fast paced tactical
