I had a lot of fun with the latest version of Photoshop. I had been using and hating it for too many years. I got so used to Photoshop's limitations that I could hardly work with PS and just open a new file. I think it is a very elegant program and offers a lot of power. As a graphic designer, I could not ask for anything more in Photoshop. Software is falling, it seems, and yet we need it more than ever. Software as a service just makes things even more expensive, while cloud services make things even more time consuming. And wouldn't you know it, the publishing industry, so long at the top of the pile, is finally tumbling down into the digital underground. I imported 40+ SFX files with multiple high contrast and dark text into a document that has a very low contrast and a low text setting to make a proof for a client. I did NOT want to use the same process to output to the EPS files that were then sent on to the client. I wanted to use the Auto Contrast command in the file previewer to DRASTICALLY change the contrast and make the image look as close to the TIFF version as possible. When I did that, I noticed that the Preview image was now black and white and the EXPORT command was missing. I was also not able to change the black point slider with black tones. I never used Lightroom before and know nothing about it, but I did not want to spend a lot of time re-exporting files. Luckily Lightroom has a "Print Screen" Key icon I could use to take a screenshot.
