Both Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are available on Mac and PC. To get the most from them, we'll be using a Photoshop-themed theme, so you'll need to install the Photoshop Elements 2015 Theme plugin. SketchUp Google SketchUp is a free app for a 2D drawing and 3D modeler. It's sometimes better to draw something by hand and then model it in SketchUp, but for more complex models, you can use it as a design tool. Using SketchUp might not be for everyone, but if you're already familiar with the interface, it could be the answer. Affinity Photo Affinity Photo is a professional photo editing app from the same people who brought you Painter. It doesn't have quite the same feature set as Adobe Photoshop Elements, but it has a lot of useful features. It doesn't let you create 3D objects, but it can work out the position of objects in a photo to give you a starting point for creating your own 3D objects. Are you an illustrator? Affinity Photo is also packed with features designed for illustration. This includes drop shadows, subtle blending and opacity layers, reflections and more. Photoshop and Photoshop Elements: The Wrap-Up So, what's your favorite tool for creating or editing images? Let us know in the comments.Q: @font-face not loading font from Google Fonts to my browser I'm having some trouble with trying to load a specific font from Google Fonts to my web page. I can't seem to access my font-family property after it's been loaded. I can see the font-family property on the web inspector but it's highlighted in red as if there was a problem with the syntax. In addition I'm not having any errors in the console either. I've gone as far as removing and re-adding the @font-face

High-Performance Nanosheets-Based ZnO@Hollow Carbon Microspheres as High-Capacity Anodes for Lithium-Ion Batteries. High-performance zinc oxide (ZnO)-based anodes with high specific capacities, good rate capability, and long cycling stability for lithium-ion batteries are highly desired. Here, we report a facile and efficient strategy to synthesize ZnO@Hollow Carbon microspheres (ZnO@HC) as promising nanostructured anode materials for lithium-ion batteries. The ZnO@HC nanostructures possess high specific capacity (1190 mA h g<sup>-1</sup> at 100 mA g<sup>-1</sup>), excellent cycling stability (92.8% capacity retention after 1000 cycles), and fast charge-discharge rates (1350 mA h g<sup>-1</sup> at 10 A g<sup>-1</sup>), which are much superior to those of state-of-the-art materials. These outstanding electrochemical performances originate from the hollow carbon microspheres, which act as a carbon substitute and buffer for volume change of ZnO during the charge-discharge process, and the hollow structure of carbon microspheres, which provides excellent spaces for the adsorption of lithium and the diffusion of Li+ ions in a host matrix. It is worth noting that the capacity retention of ZnO@HC anodes was maintained even at a high current density of 10 A g<sup>-1</sup>. This work will provide a pathway for the design of high-performance electrode materials for lithium-ion batteries.

Depression, Anxiety, and Chronic Pain in Older Adults. Geriatric depression and anxiety disorders are frequently underdiagnosed. This is due in part to the altered presentation of symptoms in older adults. This review examines the factors that contribute to the presentation of depression and anxiety in older adults, and the best methods of detection. In addition, existing research regarding the treatment of geriatric depression and anxiety is reviewed, and gaps in the literature are identified. The high prevalence of depression, anxiety, and musculoskeletal pain among older adults may be linked to shared processes or mechanisms in the pathophysiology of these conditions. A better understanding of the overlap in symptom presentation among older adults would facilitate the detection and treatment of these disorders.

As pharmaceutical companies, hospitals and clinics continue to struggle with shortages of medical supplies, including syringes, fillers and medical tools, the Australian Paralympic Federation has placed an order with a German firm that will sell a new home infusion pump. The pump, made by Medtronic, has been used in places like New Zealand and the United Kingdom to deliver chemotherapy and store information about treatment regimens. It allows patients to remove patches and connect the pump to deliver their medication directly through the skin or, in the case of stored data, using the IP connections in the pump. The Australian Paralympic Federation says the $25,000 unit will allow Australian wheelchair athletes to train and compete effectively. The order, which is part of a $7 million contract with Medtronic, represents an agreement the company entered in 2015. The contract is worth $7 million, but is split equally between hardware and training software. The federal government spent close to $30 million funding one of the world's most sophisticated drug delivery machines. It is called NexDip (Neosan's Needle-free Drug Infusion System) and was installed at the National Health and Medical Research Council's (NHMRC) National Facility at Concord Hospital in 2015. After two years of living with the machine in a water-filled chamber, NHMRC says the machine was not connected to any hospital system and its use was limited to two specific medical conditions. Peggy Young, a research leader with the NHMRC, says the machine, which is equipped with an IP connection, means people with a range of illnesses can be treated for their conditions. "It is essentially a pump and software," she says. "It delivers medication in the form of a liquid or powder, and it can manage the medicine dispensing, measurement and delivery." A spokeswoman for the Department of Health says the pump is far superior to the current methods of delivering drugs such as some prescription meds which can be given as drops, as they often require frequent administration. The spokeswoman says it is used by doctors in Australia as the only way to avoid needles and also to treat people with conditions including stroke, heart failure, diabetes, cancer and asthma. "The department is in the process of evaluating the equipment we will have used at the Paralympic Games in Rio de Janeiro next year,” she says. “
